STARTER GRID

The answers to this puzzle's clues form a continuous thread that is interwoven like a tapestry. Enter one letter per space, beginning in the square at the left edge and proceeding to the right, ending at a heavy bar. When you reach the edge of the grid, make a right-angle turn in the direction of the arrow next to the grid. Each successive answer begins in the correspondingly numbered space and immediately follows the previous answer in the thread.

CRAFTING A SPELLWEAVING

Invented by Mike Shenk, the Spellweaving Puzzle Mat offers an elegant alternative to the traditional crossword puzzle.

vowels and consonants, or just common consonants (e.g., b, c, d, etc.)

Sorry about this—those punks from Azote destroyed the grid from Ravel and I deleted the original PDF. This blank grid should work just as well since you've got the answer enumerations.—P

Everything in Modulation

Music! The universal language! And what a pleasure Anyone, anywhere, can learn to read music in then they can faithfully reproduce the composition whole world opened up, with just seven notes.

Western musical notation is boring. The same old 7 letters get dull after awhile. We've made some more progressive changes to the system! A new musical accent. But don't worry, we'll make sure to ease people into it, step by step. That way, it'll surely stick around, and take hold. — A
